01 / OPERATIONAL LEADERSHIP

Leading and developing teams

Leadership, motivation and autonomy

I have developed specific skills in team leadership and motivation, effective delegation, decision-making and performance improvement. These allow me to structure teams aligned with business objectives, maintain high levels of commitment and ensure operational delivery against clear standards. I practise approachable but firm leadership, with responsibility, autonomy and operational consistency as its key pillars.

Strategic coaching and support

My approach incorporates strategic coaching tools focused on professional development, behaviour management and adaptation to changing situations, facilitating team development and constructive conflict resolution. This allows me to support both operational staff and middle managers in their professional growth and daily performance.

Team culture and operational excellence

Group psychology and cohesion

I complement this vision with specific training in leadership fundamentals, leadership techniques and group psychology, providing a deep understanding of group dynamics, motivation, communication and emotional intelligence applied to teamwork. This psychological foundation helps me anticipate tensions, strengthen cohesion and foster stable, productive workplaces.

Meetings with operational impact

I also pay particular attention to effective meeting management as a tool for alignment, decision-making and follow-up, ensuring structured, goal-oriented meetings with a real impact on daily operations.

Design Thinking and participation

Finally, I apply Design Thinking principles to involve teams in continuously improving processes and services, encouraging participation, practical innovation and a sense of belonging.

LEADERSHIP VISION

Overall, my team management style is characterised by conscious, structured and results-oriented leadership, where people drive performance and the guest experience is the direct consequence of a well-led team.
