Service Quality Orientation and Project Management in Hospitality

Introduction

My professional profile is characterised by a firm commitment to service excellence, combined with a structured Project Management perspective. This combination is particularly valuable in food service management, banqueting and hotel operations, where quality and efficiency are fundamental.

Focus on Service Quality

I see quality service as a process that must be planned, measurable and repeatable. Every aspect, from the guest experience to internal coordination between teams, requires precise alignment with clear quality, efficiency and profitability objectives. This ensures that all details consistently contribute to excellence in the service provided.

Applying Project Management to Service Management

Applying project management methodologies is essential for planning, delivering and controlling complex services, especially in demanding environments such as five-star hotels, large-scale events and operations involving multiple teams. This approach includes precise scope definition, efficient resource allocation, rigorous scheduling, strict cost control and proactive risk monitoring. Together, these allow service standards to be maintained even under intense operational pressure.

Tangible Results and Continuous Improvement

Combining practical customer service experience with knowledge of project management, team leadership and continuous improvement produces concrete results: greater customer satisfaction, consistent delivery, optimised processes and alignment between the brand promise and the actual guest experience. The main aim is to provide professional management that raises perceived quality and contributes directly to the establishment's positioning and profitability.

Specialisation in Demanding Environments

My career focuses on service excellence and professional operational management, integrating restaurant and banqueting experience with a Project Management perspective applied to service planning, control and continuous improvement. This specialisation is particularly relevant in demanding hotel environments, where quality, efficiency and profitability must work together to achieve success.
