Service Quality and Project Management in Hospitality

Introduction

My professional profile combines a firm commitment to service excellence with a structured Project Management perspective. This combination is particularly valuable in food service management, banqueting and hotel operations, where quality and efficiency are fundamental.

A focus on service quality

I see quality service as a process that must be planned, measurable and repeatable. Every aspect, from the guest experience to coordination between internal teams, requires precise alignment with clear objectives for quality, efficiency and profitability. This ensures that every detail consistently contributes to service excellence.

Applying Project Management to service management

Project management methodologies are essential for planning, delivering and controlling complex services, especially in demanding settings such as five-star hotels, large-scale events and operations involving multiple teams.

This approach includes precise scope definition, efficient resource allocation, rigorous scheduling, strict cost control and proactive risk monitoring. Together, these enable service standards to be maintained even under intense operational pressure.

Tangible results and continuous improvement

Combining practical customer service experience with knowledge of project management, team leadership and continuous improvement produces concrete results: greater guest satisfaction, consistent delivery, optimised processes and alignment between the brand promise and the actual guest experience.

The main aim is to provide professional management that raises perceived quality and contributes directly to the establishment's positioning and profitability.

Specialisation in demanding environments

My career focuses on service excellence and professional operational management, integrating restaurant and banqueting experience with a Project Management approach to service planning, control and continuous improvement.

This specialisation is particularly relevant in demanding hotel environments, where quality, efficiency and profitability must work together to achieve success.

Ramón Alberto Curbalán Vega · Manager

English translation of the portfolio document. The original Spanish document contains a digital signature; that signature is not reproduced or transferred to this translation.